ALT-METAL FROM SOUTH HOLLAND, NL.

DEBUT EP POISON[ED] OUT NOW

INFERNAL MACHINE is an alt-metal band from South Holland, Netherlands. Grunge, nu metal and a dash of rap, played by four people who don't look like they're in a metal band. If you expect long black hair and a straight face, you'll be disappointed. If you want a loud show, you won't.

BIOGRAPHY

Machine infernale was once the name for a homemade weapon, so destructive it was named after hell itself. The band looks a lot more innocent. Run into the four band members on the street and metal isn't what comes to mind. See them live and it is.

The band started as a group of friends, including drummer Bart and guitarist Gino, playing music without a singer. Dylan filled that spot. When the original bassist moved to France, Anja joined, and it clicked right away. The band has played in this line-up since 2025.

The music is hard to pin down. Alt-metal is the core, with the rawness of grunge, the groove of nu metal and the occasional rap flow. The influences are clear without turning into a copy: Rage Against the Machine, System of a Down, Korn, Nirvana and Alice in Chains.

In October 2026 the band released its debut EP POISON[ED], celebrated with a packed release party at NIS in Spijkenisse. The five songs share a loose thread of disillusionment with modern society. Poison is about depending on something that feeds and poisons you at the same time, Drop The Act tears the mask off forced positivity and corporate small talk, Wildfire is about a love that can't be, and Sound Of The Collapse follows someone losing control to addiction. The EP closes with Back Home In Derry, the band's take on the song Bobby Sands wrote in prison, about Irish rebels exiled to Australia in 1803.

INFERNAL MACHINE has played shows in Spijkenisse, Rotterdam and The Hague and is ready for more. Don't expect straight faces. Do expect a loud show.
